Chapter One

A bar. He brought the kid to a damn bar.

Rafe Alexander gripped the steering wheel. The tips of his fingers burned from the press of his sharpened nails against his skin, and his jaw ached from the pressure of his fangs sliding into place. He wanted to beat the human for exposing a preschooler to a world of drunks and illicit behaviors.

But if it saved her? Yeah. If the human kept their cub from falling into the wrong hands, Rafe would be thanking the guy, right after he explained with his fists that a bar in the backwoods of West Virginia wasn't the right environment for a little girl.

He slammed the SUV's door and strode across the bar's parking lot. A few males tucked their dates closer and turned in the opposite direction. Others dropped their gazes to the pavement underfoot. The familiar reaction to his presence annoyed him, but it wasn't their fault. Humans might not know what he was by looking at him, but they sensed the danger--the predator in their midst--and reacted accordingly.

He tightened his control over his primal side. He didn't need any attention directed his way, not with the shit that had gone down here a few hours ago: a fire that resulted in a fatality.

Sure, tragedies happened all the time, and in the grand scheme of things, one human's passing was a blip on the radar. For Rafe, though, Tony Conway's death was personal. The male had unknowingly adopted a shifter, a rare white lion cub Rafe had been tasked with retrieving.

He cursed. The fire was too damn coincidental. Word of a shifter cub living among humans surfaces, and the next day her human father dies. Yeah, it's not related at all. Right.

Once the fire chief finished his investigation, he'd realize the fire hadn't been an accident too. The authorities would begin to search for the arsonist. It wouldn't do them any good. Even if they collected evidence from the scene, they wouldn't understand why Tony had been targeted. Rafe couldn't share the details surrounding Megan's uniqueness with them either. Shifters were fictional beings in most humans' eyes. That fact hampered Rafe's efforts. He was left on the sidelines with limited options.

Rafe's lion, one of the three feline spirits he housed, snarled, echoing his frustration. He used a mental hand to stroke the big cat's side. It was the best he could do to calm the animal since it couldn't speak or share its thoughts with him. His tiger and jaguar, the other two felines he'd been born with, nudged him, seeking his reassurance too.

We'll get our cub back. Promise. The vow wrapped around him, strengthening him. He let the connection to his cats fade and took a deep, calming breath. A familiar scent invaded his lungs. Lion. Faint, yet distinctive. He was on the right path.

Long strides took him around the bar, an older structure that appeared as if it had seen several upgrades and expansions over its lifetime. An upper and lower deck graced one side. The raised level had tables, while the lower featured a live band and dance area. People moved on both, and the sharp twining from instruments as the musicians warmed up carried over the drone of laughter and conversation.

The place was packed, a good thing for those partying and an inconvenience for him. He had business to take care of that didn't need an audience. He continued past the decks to the employee entrance. Several cars and trucks were parked near the door.

He followed the smell carrying on the breeze to a blue SUV. A child's car seat was secured in the back. He tugged on the door handle. Locked. No matter. Going by the strength of the scent seeping from the cracked window, Megan had traveled in the vehicle recently. He pulled out his cell and dialed his friend and fellow pride member, Devin.

"Yeah?" Devin answered.

"You were right. Megan is with her uncle. I found Josh's car, and there are enough stuffed animals and toys in it to amuse any cub with a short attention span."

"Have you spotted her?"

"Not yet, but if she's here, I'll get her." Rafe glanced over his shoulder at the building. "And once I hand her over to you, Josh and I are having a little talk about how kids should be raised."

"Just because the neighbor remembered seeing Megan with Josh doesn't mean he took her to the bar. The woman said he owns the place. Maybe he's working, and he dropped Megan off at a sitter or something."

The idea didn't comfort him. Actually, it'd almost be better if Josh had taken Megan to work with him. It'd be harder to carry a screaming five-year old through a packed bar than killing her sitter without bystanders nearby and walking away with their rare cub--the innocent child who had a price on her head.

"As soon as I find out, I'll call."

Devin's sigh carried over the line. "Good. I want out of here as soon as possible."

"You didn't have to come. I could've brought one of my brothers."

"You know I couldn't stay behind, not when kids are threatened."

Yeah, he knew that. It was a damn honorable trait, but Devin wasn't exactly sane. Dropping him in a tense situation with humans close by was a disaster waiting to happen, but Rafe wasn't their pride leader. He didn't get to make the decisions. Kade did, and sometimes Rafe wondered if his twin thought through his dictates before issuing them.

"So, what did you find at Tony's office?" Rafe asked.

"A whole box of documents from the lawyer who handled Megan's adoption and..."

Rafe waited for him to finish and finally prompted, "And?"

Devin cleared his throat. "The female you smelled at Tony's house has spent time here too."

TREASURED FIND: ROYAL SHIFTERS (ROYAL-KAGAN SHIFTER WORLD BOOK 1) BY NANCY CORRIGAN PDF

Sometimes the greatest finds are unexpected.

After five centuries, Rafe Alexander knows what to expect from life--boredom broken by the occasional call from Shifter Affairs. No matter how mundane the job, he always accepts their plea for help. He knows what it's like to lose loved ones to the shifter trafficking rings decimating their species.

But the task that takes him to West Virginia changes everything. A human is dead. A shifter child is missing. And the human female connected to both tragedies is hiding a secret.

Unraveling the mystery surrounding her is a must. But the felines he houses—lion, tiger and jaguar—want him to get close to her for another reason. Jasmine is special. His.

And as danger mounts, he's left balancing his desire for revenge and his need to protect. But the line between them isn't always black and white, especially where his family is concerned.

A wonderful start to a series about a unique class of feline shapeshifters

By Elf2060

4.5 stars

This fascinating paranormal romance is a delicious introduction to a world that has very special feline shapeshifters who are part of the elite section of their society. I love the novelty of these multispecies shifters, and the complex organization that they have. There are several intriguing characters that are introduced, as well as several layers of mystery, some of which is resolved in this story, and others which will continue into other books in the series. The combination of shapeshifters, children, and humans is a great draw and provides a nice change from many of the stories in this genre. The heat and complicated relationship between the main characters is delicious, and I was fascinated by the interaction of the multiple felids. Many of the characters have painful pasts that have made them despair of finding a true mate, but one definitely hopes that even the most damaged of them will find someone to love and be loved by.

It is my understanding that this is a revamped and re-edited version of an earlier release and that this story is connected to the 'Kagan Wolves' series but I had no trouble reading it as a stand-alone story and I am anxious to read more stories that are set in this world because I can't wait to find out how some of the issues are resolved.

"Treasured Find" by Nancy Corrigan is the first book in the 'Royal Pride' series and centers around several very special children who are of interest to Rafe Alexander and his pride. Jasmine (Jazz) has been very careful to hide the two very special little boys that are the one bright reminder of a horrific time in her life, but when a close friend is murdered, she knows that she must share some of her secrets with her ex, who has suddenly become a guardian of a remarkable little girl. Despite her distrust of Rafe's sudden appearance in their lives, she is inexplicably drawn to him but then she discovers he's exactly what she has been warned against. Now she must decide whether to trust her instincts, and the wrong decision can be fatal for all of them.

Treasured Find

By Evampire

Rafe Alexander needs to discover the mystery surrounding Jasmine because a human is dead, a shifter child is missing and the human is connected to both tragedies in this exciting paranormal romance.

Jasmine is determined to protect her secrets, no matter how sexy Rafe Alexander is and the reader can't help but get pulled into the story as the danger mounts and Rafe is left balancing his desire for revenge against his need to protect. The chemistry between Jazz and Rafe is a smoldering inferno of red hot passion but with secrets on both sides, trust issues and a dangerous threat to them all, they have a lot of obstacles to overcome which has some emotional encounters gripping readers by the heart. These strong, captivating characters are easily related to while as they demand the reader's attentions and the fast paced, smooth flowing plot thrills readers with lots of suspense, excitement and romance.

The shifters are bombarded with strife from every direction as they try to hide their existence from humans and deal with their declining numbers but the Royals have a bit more to handle as they deal with jealousies and greed and with someone trafficking shifters for some nefariously evil purpose the danger continues to escalate keeping tensions and excitement high throughout the story with some unexpected twists keeping everyone guessing. The well written scenes and details capture the imagination and make it easy for the reader to become completely caught up in the characters and their story while the intriguing events ensure that there is never a dull moment.

Nancy Corrigan has created a fascinating shifter world with some very intriguing and interestingly different elements that add quite a bit of spice to the story. I was completely captivated by Rafe and Jazz's story while quite a few of the other characters also grabbed my attention and of course the overall suspenseful conflict in this world has grabbed ahold of my imagination and refuses to let go, so I can't wait to read the next story to find out what happens.

3??? Oh boy...

4 Stars – 3 Flames

I have to start this off by stating that I had no idea that this intertwined with the Kagan Wolves (another awesome series I just finished a month ago). So imagine my surprise when I'm reading along and the Wolf Pack is mentioned, I totally almost lost it. LOVING THIS!!!

Let's get down the nitty gritty. Jasmine, aka Jazz, went back to her small hometown with a secret that no one could ever find out about. Not if she planned on saving lives. Too bad her secret has secluded her, both physically and romantically. After a tragedy strikes too close to home, she visits an ex-lover to warn him about a potential danger. But before she has a chance to talk to him, she is completely mesmerized by Rafe Alexander, someone who is on his own mission.

Rafe can't seem to get it together. He's housing 3 felines who have been "gnawing" at Rafe to pursue Jazz, even though he can't quite trust her. He knows she has a secret, but can't seem to get his cats to keep their paws off of her. Not that she's complaining.

I really like PNR's and can completely appreciate a good shifter read. But this isn't good, it's great! I typically only read about a shifter housing 1 being (wolf, gargoyle, tiger, lion, etc.), but this one deals with 3, each having their own characteristics and "purpose". The romance that blossoms is beautiful, but the character building revolving around the packs is awesome. I can't wait to read the next one!!!

Devin's sigh carried over the line. "Good. I want out of here as soon as possible."

"You didn't have to come. I could've brought one of my brothers."

"You know I couldn't stay behind, not when kids are threatened."

Yeah, he knew that. It was a damn honorable trait, but Devin wasn't exactly sane. Dropping him in a tense situation with humans close by was a disaster waiting to happen, but Rafe wasn't their pride leader. He didn't get to make the decisions. Kade did, and sometimes Rafe wondered if his twin thought through his dictates before issuing them.

"So, what did you find at Tony's office?" Rafe asked.

"A whole box of documents from the lawyer who handled Megan's adoption and..."

Rafe waited for him to finish and finally prompted, "And?"

Devin cleared his throat. "The female you smelled at Tony's house has spent time here too."
