Disappointing Prelude

By jbpiers

“Woof” introduced Bowser and Birdie, two likable characters who shared an implausible adventure involving a stolen map. It seemed geared to upper elementary age children but even that level of reading sophistication might have found the story silly.

Unfortunately Birdie repeatedly disobeyed or ignored authorities to accomplish her goals. She also never took any responsibility for the illegality of her actions. All in all, Birdie was not a very positive portrayal of a “latch-key” kid.

Bowser’s role as the storyteller might be a fresh approach to young readers but seemed worn after reading Quinn’s Chet and Bernie stories. If “Woof” is a prelude to further adventures, I hope new, positive adult role models will emerge for Birdie.

Best novel from the point of view of a dog

By Orson Scott Card

Best novel from the point of view of a dog that I've ever read. Quinn creates a fascinating, believable mystery novel about a young girl and her grandmother struggling to keep their Cajun country bait shop from getting crushed by a ruthless competitor. The girl and her dog don't do anything that strains believability - the dog, especially, remains within dog-land with everything he actually does. Meanwhile, though, the dog remains a wonderfully witty narrator in spite of, or because of, all the things about human society that he doesn't understand. We enjoy the dog because of his voice, and come to love him for his fierce loyalty. I loved this book as an adult reader; the children I know who have read it love it, if anything, more.

Not just for kids

By PJ

I am almost a senior citizen, but I loved this book. I have all the Chet and Bernie novels, but I liked this one as well, maybe better. It's very similar - Bowser could be Chef's twin brother - but there's no profanity and very little violence. Birdie is a likable character, and the plot was more detailed than I expected. I am looking forward to reading the next in the series, and plan on purchasing several copies of "Woof" for my friends - both children and adults!
